Report of the Board of Directors for the year ended 31 October 2012

Principal activities

The principal activities of Open Rights (which trades as the Open Rights Group or ORG) are -

- To raise awareness of digital rights matters in the media, with policy makers and with the general public
- To preserve and extend civil, human and consumer rights in the digital environment
- To nurture and assist a community of campaigning volunteers

This is achieved by, among other things the organisation of grassroots campaigns, lobbying politicians and policy makers, the provision of a media clearinghouse service, and the publication of research and white papers

Financial results for the year

The financial results for the year are set out on page 6

Overview

In the year to 31 October 2012, Open Rights Group continued its campaigning work, benefiting from increased income, enabling the Group to expand the range of issues we work on For the first time we employed a technical officer to expand our staff knowledge and complement our supporters' and advisors' expertise. We held elections to the Board, appointing three directors chosen by our paying supporters.

Our 2012 work included a campaign to reform copyright, including to create a right to parody, to reduce the threat from copyright claims to parodists' and campaigners' free expression, especially from powerful publishers and brands. We worked on the new data protection reforms in Europe. We also tracked developments in open data policy closely, especially with regards to privacy threats and extending the value of cultural works to society and the economy. We highlighted the threats from proposals for mass Internet surveillance, which was released as the draft Communications Data Bill, widely known as the 'Snoopers' Charter'

In March 2012 over 350 supporters and activists attended ORGCon, ORG's annual conference. The event enabled ORG to recruit new paying supporters, as well as educate and inspire people to campaign on an individual basis.

Campaigns

Copyright and enforcement

2012 did not see the Digital Economy Act moving into force, although Ofcom consulted and tried to implement it We worked to highlight some of the practical problems around wifi operators. We raised funds to fight an application for user data to target people accused of downloading copyrighted pornographic works, the first time that ORG has sought to intervene in a court case on behalf of individuals, and the second time we have presented information to UK courts

Data protection

ORG tracked the new data protection proposals drafted by the EU Commission and supported their work as they began to discuss the reform

Snoopers' Charter

Following inside information that the Home Office planned to create powers to log Internet communication transactions, we worked with the media and politicians to explain what this would mean in practice. We helped the Liberal Democrats to maintain a strong line through conference policy in spring 2012, helping them to demand parliamentary scrutiny through a Joint Committee in summer and autumn 2012. Jim Killock gave oral evidence to the committee on behalf of ORG

Web filtering

Proposals for Internet filtering by default were raised by a group of MPs led by Claire Perry Ostensibly to protect children from viewing pornography, we understood the proposals to be a significant danger to the open Internet, innovation and free expression, not least because of the significant levels of error in website blocking technologies. In 2012, we detailed the problems on mobile networks in a report on mobile blocking, collected error reports via blocked orguk and gave evidence to Claire Perry's committee. Finally, we helped supporters to give evidence to MPs and the Department for Education when they consulted on 'default blocking'. We won a major victory when these plans were rolled back.

Future plans

The most immediate need we face is to expand our legal capacity, for analysis of surveillance laws, changes to copyright laws and taking forward legal complaints. Enforcement of individual rights often takes place in courts as well as in legislation, and a knowledge of both is extremely important, to complement our policy and technical knowledge. We are also seeking to improve our campaigns and communications capacity, especially in the light of threats such as the Snoopers' Charter.

Financial Situation

In the year to 31 October 2012, Open Rights Group's income was more than double what it was three years earlier, and 18 per cent higher than in 2010 - 11 ORG's two main sources of income remain funding from grant making trusts, and donations from supporters Grant funding continued to rise and still makes up around 55 per cent of income Donations from supporters also rose in the year, supplemented by gross revenues from public events

We received grant funding from four trusts FreeBMD funding continued for a second successive year, coming to an end at the end of August 2012 Funding from the Open Society Foundations (formerly the Open Society Institute) continued, at a slightly lower level, and effectively continues to fund one full-time campaign position. The grant from Sigrid Rausing Trust, which started funding us in March 2011, was renewed in March 2012, at the slightly higher level of £30,000 a year, for three years, and is a grant towards core activities and costs. In addition ORG received two grants from the Joseph Rowntree Reform Trust, one of £5,000 for research into website blocking on smartphones and a larger grant of £22,700 in September 2012 (most of which will be reflected in the accounts for 2012-13), together with a grant of £3,500 from the Andrew Wainwright Reform Trust. These last two grants were both raised to enable campaigning against the government's proposed Communications Data Bill

Donations from supporters, including one-off gifts, rose from over £89,000 in 2010 - 11, to nearly £96,000 in 2011 - 12. This was helped by a significant increase in paying supporters as a result of our annual conference, ORGCon, and by the end of the year ORG had nearly 1,500 paying supporters, most donating on a monthly basis, by direct debit, standing order, or via PayPal. The total also benefited from an increase in one-off or ad hoc donations, to just over £3,000 in the year.

Total expenditure increased, from just over £179,000 to nearly £229,000. This partly reflected more active external campaigning, including public events, most especially ORGCon 2012. The largest single increase in expenditure however was increased salary costs, reflecting the appointment of an extra, part-time but permanent member of staff during the year. ORG is also ably helped by a number of volunteers, in the running of events as well as day-to-day campaigning.

ORG retained a small surplus of slightly more than £10,000 for the year, bringing reserves up to just over £38,000
